

Health and Safety Programs for Temporary Workers

February 18, 2022
1:00-5:00pm PT
Seattle, WA

This course is designed to provide a basic overview of the methods for identifying and controlling workplace hazards and to discuss the roles and responsibilities of staffing agencies and host employers with regard to the development of health and safety programs.

This half-day training is designed for staffing agency and host employer representatives who may be responsible for employee health and safety, or for developing contracts that include language about health and safety responsibilities. This session will also include an introduction to some specific tools for addressing reproductive health hazards in workplaces with temporary workers.

Key topics covered in this training include:

- Elements of an effective health and safety program that protects employees placed in secondary workplaces
- Roles of the host employer and the staffing agency in protecting temporary workers
- Identifying and addressing key hazards in different workplaces
- Strategies for providing training about health and safety by host employers and staffing agencies, and for maintaining communication with temporary employees

Curriculum was developed by Robin Dewey, MPH and the Center for Occupational and Environmental Health at UC Berkeley.
